

LISTENER'S CLUB

Yesterday evening Itzhak Pinsk read two poems by David Shimonowitz. Mr. Pinsk, who is of the Jerusalem Dramatic Studio, seems to be a talented artist, but he tended to over-emphasize the dramatic element of the poems a little.

"Take it Easy" was Mr. Karniel's advice with regard to the crisis. He gave at some length the opinions of the Haifa Parliament on the present international situation. This august body sits in two chambers in the park known as Gan Benyamin in Hadar Hacarmel. Its procedure is similar to that of the Tel Aviv Parliament which controls the destinies of men on the benches of Rothschild Boulevard.

Offenbach is enjoying a vogue in Palestine, and Lotte Kristall and Marcel Noe sang excerpts from two of his lesser known operettas. These works are "dated" (like last year's musical comedy), but they nevertheless contain some delightful melodies, full of sparkle and atmosphere. The singers rather missed these essential qualities, and so the programme fell a little flat.
